75% of the earth is covered by water, but less than 1% of that water is available fresh water. The remaining 99.2% is either salt water or permanently frozen.

Current estimates state that by the year 2050 most populated countries will be out of usable fresh water. The natural hydrologic cycle can not keep up with the current population growth and pollution rates.

The only way to stop this potential catastrophe is to change the way we use and recycle our water supply. The planet has been handling this process for years, now it's time for us to lend a hand.
